

DR. AMIR DASTGAH

Bio

Dr. Amir Dastgah received his undergraduate degree from the University of The Pacific in Stockton, California. He then attended San Francisco State University where he earned an advanced degree in Biochemistry and Neuroscience.

Dr. Dastgah earned his medical degree from the California School of Podiatric Medicine, followed by four years of intense surgical training, first at Staten Island University Hospital, which has a state-of-the-art wound care center, followed by Beth Israel Medical Center Mount Sinai/Einstein School of Medicine. At both hospitals, Dr. Dastgah earned the title of Chief Resident, honed his skills, and developed a multidisciplinary approach to diabetic limb salvage. His rigorous, rare, and extremely diverse four-year surgical residency training—which fewer than five percent of all podiatrists have—has provided him the opportunity to be exposed not only to all aspects of foot and ankle surgery, but all facets of medicine.

Throughout his career, Dr. Dastgah has published articles in medical journals and presented at national conventions on topics of foot and ankle surgery. He is a board-certified podiatrist. His diverse background is invaluable at the wound center as many patients may show non-healing wounds of the foot and lower extremities but also have more complex health conditions. He is a personal trainer and an avid soccer player.
